

Donation Matching information

What Is Donation Matching?

Donation matching is a corporate giving initiative in which an employer matches their employee's contribution to a specific cause, increasing the gift. For example, if a XXX employee donates $50 to a local organization, the matching gift would be XXX's additional donation of $50. Instead of receiving a one-time $50 donation from a XXX employee, the organization receives $100, thanks to the employee and XXX.

Companies that participate in donation matching have a standard set of guidelines they follow when matching gifts. For example, most will typically match cash donations but not in-kind donations. They will also have maximum match amounts and submission deadlines. They may even have rules about what kinds of organizations they will contribute to (churches and religious organizations are often off-limits).

What information do you probably need?

If your employer supports donation matching, you most likely need to follow an internal process to submit your proof of donation which will trigger the process within your company to match this amount and send our organization a separate check with the matching amount.

Once we collect your original donation, we will send you a receipt – see the example below.
